Liverpool goalkeeper Simon Mignolet was back in his hometown of Sint-Truiden in Belgium, hosting a charity training session for 200 youngsters from around the area at the Stayen Stadium.

The event was hosted in the name of the Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis charity and the Reds man - who is an ambassador for the organisation - was on hand to give out some tips to those who attended.

As reported by the Liverpool Echo, Mignolet was happy signing shirts and footballs while posting a number of pictures on his official Instagram account.

The day began at 11am with three hour-long sessions after which the kids were given a chance to have a photo with Mignolet.

The ALS Liga website said: "Simon Mignolet has decided to put his shoulders under the ALS League, but he does not want to do that alone.

"We are stronger together and so Simon is looking for your support. Has your son or daughter ever wanted to test their penalties against a Red Devil? Then that moment has arrived.

"With your participation in 'ALS Simon Voetbalt', you not only get tips from a world-class goalkeeper, but also support your charity."

Mignolet enjoyed his finest campaign in a Liverpool shirt in 2016/17 as the Reds secured Champions League qualification in Jurgen Klopp's first full season at Anfield.
